ABOUT

Hello, my name is Joe Sir. I have been working with youth and families for over 25 years. Including working with at risk kids and their parents. I was involved with developing mentorship programs and providing resources for kids and their families with serious needs. We also developed relationships with counseling services for families in need of long term counseling needs. I have also been involved with addiction programs and working at recovery homes and jails.

Music has been a big part of my life and I started in a band with my brothers at the age of 14. Music is a great way to connect with people and break through to common interests. My goal is to find common ground in whatever area I can and build the consumer's trust and communicate that they are loved and they have value.

I believe my main responsibility on earth is to help people experience the kind of genuine relationships where they know they are truly cared for, important, and deeply loved so that they might experience the love of a personal and caring God. My heart is to help people feel accepted and heard no matter where they come from or what they have done. To help them find hope and grow stronger so they can move in the direction of healing and peace and lead a meaningful life as they experience joy through recovery.
